Students, faculty, and partner attorneys from the James H. Binger Center for New Americans helped win the landmark Mellouli v. Holder case at the U.S. Supreme Court.

Having great professors, great mentors, and great classmates helped push me to be the best version of myself that I could be. My experience at Minnesota Law also gave me the confidence and prepared me to seek opportunities in the areas where I wanted to go.

The University of Minnesota Law School has always stood out to me because its dedicated faculty provides a top-notch legal education, and there is strong sense of collegiality among the class. My professors cared deeply about their students and were passionate educators. That was evident every day. The community that my classmates and I were a part of created a network that I still benefit from today.

FORT LEWIS, WASHINGTON

I chose Minnesota Law because of its commitment and support for students who are passionate about service. I had professors in class and mentors at internships who were genuinely invested in my development as a lawyer and public servant. I’m extremely fortunate and grateful for that, and serving as a Judge Advocate in the U.S. Army gives me a chance to pay it forward.

The broad education I received at Minnesota Law has allowed me to thrive in public policy — an area of the law that I may not have seen myself working in when I first started law school. Working in Professor Jennie Green’s Human Rights Litigation and International Advocacy Clinic gave me insight into the public policy aspect of the law. In the clinic, we worked to ensure that human rights standards weren’t weakened, which made me realize how important policy is in ensuring our rights.
